Zum Studium des M.Ed. im Fach Englisch

Das M.Ed.-Studium im Fach Englisch besteht aus einem Fachwissenschaftlichen Modul, einem Modul Fremdsprachenausbildung und zwei Fremdsprachendidaktischen Modulen. Das Fachwissenschaftliche Modul umfasst drei Lehrveranstaltungen – zwei Übungen und eine Vorlesung –, die schulrelevante fachwissenschaftliche Kenntnisse und Methoden in den Bereichen Linguistik, Literatur- und Kulturwissenschaften vermitteln.

Das Modul Fremdsprachenausbildung besteht aus zwei Übungen, die die Sprachkompetenz in den schulischen Verwendungsbereichen festigen und erweitern. Hierzu werden drei Veranstaltungstypen angeboten, von denen einer (Kommunikation) obligatorisch ist, und aus den anderen beiden (Grammatik oder Übersetzung) einer auszuwählen ist.

Das Modul Fremdsprachendidaktik I: Grundlagen besteht aus einem Einführungsseminar in die Textdidaktik und einem Einführungsseminar in die Sprachdidaktik. In der Einführungsveranstaltung Grundlagen der Textdidaktik werden u.a. behandelt die adressatenspezifische Vermittlung englischsprachiger Texte für Schüler verschiedener Alters- und Kompetenzstufen, für den Fremdsprachenunterricht zentrale literatur- und textdidaktische Konzepte, fachdidaktische Erschließungs- und Vermittlungsverfahren in Bezug auf den Umgang mit Texten verschiedener Provenienz (einschließlich audiovisueller Dokumente) sowie die handlungsorientierte Auseinandersetzung mit Prozessen des Hör-, Hörseh- und Leseverstehens und ihrer unterrichtlichen Umsetzung. In der Einführungsveranstaltung Grundlagen der Sprachdidaktik lernen die Studierenden die zentralen wissenschaftlichen Theorien zum Erwerb bzw. gesteuerten Lernen und Lehren von Fremdsprachen kennen, die in der Fremdsprachendidaktik und zentralen Nachbardisziplinen diskutiert werden.

Das Modul Fremdsprachendidaktik II: Praxis und Vertiefung besteht aus einem Begleitseminar zum Praxissemester und einem anschließenden Vertiefungsseminar. Im Begleitseminar zum Praxissemester reflektieren Studierende u.a. ihre eigene Berufseignung aus fachspezifischer Perspektive und entwickeln ein eigenes professionelles Selbstkonzept. Im Vertiefungsseminar konsolidieren und vertiefen Studierende ihre im Grundlagenmodul und der Phase des Praxissemesters gewonnenen Erkenntnisse exemplarisch auf einem fachdidaktischen Spezialgebiet ihrer Wahl, um somit theoriegeleitet ihre Erfahrungen aus dem Praxissemester weiter zur reflektieren und zu vertiefen.

Zulassungsbedingungen

Das Fach-Studium Englisch im Master of Education darf erst nach Teilnahme an einem obligatorischen Beratungsgespräch aufgenommen werden. Das Gespräch erfolgt durch die Studienfachberaterin im Fach Englisch (in der Regel als Gruppenberatung, bitte auf Aushänge achten) oder – in Ausnahmefällen – durch die im M.Ed. Prüfungsberechtigten. Hierüber wird eine Bescheinigung ausgestellt. Der für den M.Ed.-Abschluss obligatorische Auslandsaufenthalt (nach LABG 2009), der durch einen nicht-kreditierten separaten Eintrag in eCampus vermerkt werden muss, ist nach Aufnahme des Studiums bei der Auslandsberatung des Englischen Seminars nachzuweisen.

Belegung von Veranstaltungen

Im Modul Fremdsprachenausbildung ist der Besuch eines Communication-Kurses obligatorisch. Die andere Veranstaltung kann nach Wahl der Studierenden Grammar oder Translation sein. Die Teilnahme am Modul Fremdsprachendidaktik II sowie die Teilnahme am Praxissemester setzen die erfolgreiche Teilnahme am Modul Fremdsprachendidaktik I voraus.

Modulprüfungen und Masterarbeit

Im M.Ed. Englisch sind die folgenden Leistungen als Modulprüfungen zu erbringen: mündliche Prüfung im Umfang von 40 Minuten im Fachwissenschaftlichen Modul (=25% der Fachnote) (diese Prüfung umfasst i.d.R. zwei mit dem/der/den PrüferInnen abzusprechende Themengebiete; sie kann von einem/einer PrüferIn in Gegenwart einer zweiten prüfungsberechtigten Person oder aber von zwei PrüferInnen, die jeweils eines der beiden Gebiete prüfen, abgenommen werden. Bitte sprechen Sie mögliche PrüferInnen rechtzeitig an und informieren Sie sich über die Details); Modulprüfung im Modul Fremdsprachenausbildung, schriftlich oder mündlich je nach gewählter Teilveranstaltung (=25% der Fachnote); Schriftliche Prüfung (Klausur) im Modul Fremdsprachendidaktik I: Grundlagen (=25% der Fachnote); Schriftliche Prüfung (Seminararbeit) im Modul Fremdsprachendidaktik II: Praxis und Vertiefung (=25% der Fachnote). Wollen Studierende ihre Master-Arbeit im Fach Englisch schreiben, kann diese in englischer oder deutscher Sprache abgefasst werden. Sie kann nicht als Gruppenarbeit angefertigt werden. Die Anmeldung zur Master-Arbeit ist möglich, sobald 15 CP im Fachstudium und das Praxissemester absolviert worden sind.

Anmeldung zu den Lehrveranstaltungen per eCampus

Die Lehrveranstaltungen des Englischen Seminars beginnen ab dem 14.04.2025. Bitte betrachten Sie alle anderslautenden Ankündigungen als überholt. Die erste Semesterwoche ist für die Durchführung und Korrektur von Nachprüfungen sowie für die Studienberatung vorgesehen.

Die Anmeldungen für die Veranstaltungen der Mastermodule können in der Zeit vom 26.02.2025, 08.00 Uhr, bis 19.03.2025, 21 Uhr

vorgenommen werden. Wegen des Verteilverfahrens kommt es nicht darauf an, gleich am Starttag alle Anmeldungen durchzuführen. Nach Abschluss der Anmeldungen wird das Verteilverfahren generiert, das dann zu den vorläufigen Teilnehmerlisten führt. Sollten sich nach dem Abschluss des Verteilverfahrens auf der Basis der von Ihnen vorgegebenen Priorisierung Terminkonflikte mit Veranstaltungen des 2. Faches oder der Erziehungswissenschaft ergeben, wenden Sie sich bitte an die Dozenten oder Dozentinnen der betroffenen Lehrveranstaltung. Bitte bachten Sie die von den VeranstaltungsleiterInnen definierten Teilnahmebedingungen. In den allermeisten Fällen reicht eine bloße Anmeldung in eCampus nicht aus, um den Teilnahmestatus zu behalten, sondern ist es erforderlich, in den ersten zwei Sitzungen der Veranstaltung persönlich zu erscheinen.

Bitte beachten Sie auch, dass es zwischen der Veröffentlichung des Vorlesungsverzeichnisses und dem Beginn der Veranstaltung vereinzelt zu Raumänderungen kommen kann. Überprüfen Sie also ggf. die Raumangabe in eCampus kurz vor der ersten Sitzung.

Lingua Franca Communication, 3 CP

2 st. mo 12-14

HGB 10

Meierkord

Lingua Franca communication takes place between non-native speakers of a language. They have different mother tongues as well as different cultural backgrounds. Today, English is the language that is most often used for this purpose around the world, and this fact has recently resulted in a huge scientific interest in this topic. This series of lectures discusses the spread of English and its function as an international but also as an intranational lingua franca (e.g. in Nigeria and India). We will explore the history of research into English as a lingua franca, describe the various forms of Englishes that meet in such conversations, discuss how participants successfully interact in such contexts, and whether new forms of English are emerging from this.

The theoretical parts will be supplemented by discussions of data excerpts. Despite the lecture character of this course, students will be expected to actively participate in the data analysis parts, which will take place during the last third of each lecture.

Assessment/requirements: written exam and additional independent reading of appr. 30 pages on one of the lecture topics.

Shakespeare's Sonnets – An Overview, 3 CP

2 st. di 8.30-10

HGB 30

Weidle

This lecture is intended to provide an overview of what some perceive to be the most difficult sonnet collection in English. Published in 1609, "SHAKE-SPEARES Sonnets. Neuer before Imprinted" comprises 154 sonnets which feature four main character constructs: the poet speaker, a dark or black/'black'/Black mistress, a 'fair youth', and rival poets. These character constructs are staged in a complex web of relationships of desire, poetic ambition, and deception. In my lecture I will focus on how the collection engages with the sonnet tradition and the sonnet form, the sequence's early textual history, the main characters, and the sequence's impressionistic narrative structure. The main part of the lecture will be devoted to discussing what I believe to be the five main theme clusters, i.e. preservation, writing, desire, deception, and imagination, and to how they organize the sequence.

I will base the lecture on my Comprehensive Guide to Shakespeare's Sonnets (Bloomsbury, The Arden Shakespeare, 2024). Students interested in purchasing a copy at a reduced price should contact me via email (staff-anglistik1@rub.de). Secondary material will be made available on Moodle. Students should obtain either the Arden edition of the Sonnets (edited by Katherine Duncan-Jones) or the Oxford edition by Colin Burrow.

Assessment/requirements: interview in the final weeks of term.

050 636Narrative Theory, 3 CP

2 st. di 12-14

HGB 20

Klawitter

This course of lectures aims to enhance the understanding of major aspects of narrative fiction. It will deal with the significance of titles and intertextual relations, matters of perspectivization (types of narration and focalization), the ethos of narrators, the building blocks of narrative discourse (report, description, comment and speech), the constitution of characters, the construction of plot, the creation of mystery and suspense, the functionalization of time and space, the introduction and development of themes, and the use of self-reflexivity. The various choices and techniques available to writers will be illustrated with excerpts from classics of British fiction.

- Christoph Bode. Der Roman: Eine Einführung. Francke, 2005.

The texts used in the course will be made available through Moodle.

Assessment/requirements: test in the final week of term.

050 646North American Literature & Culture III: Cold War to Present, 3 CP

2 st. mo 14-16

HGB 30

Bieger

This is the third part of a three-part lecture series, and it provides a historical and thematic overview of North American literature and culture from the Cold War to the present. In discussing paradigmatic texts of literary and intellectual history of this period side by side with major developments in the visual arts, architecture, media and popular culture, we will explore the cultural forms and practices emerging in North America as a consequence of its colonization and the founding of the U.S. American nation-state as a highly pluralized and paradigmatically modern culture that thrives on the intersecting and at times colliding forces of democratization, individualization and commodification.

The aim of this course is to lay the foundation for the study of North American literature and culture and help students make informed choices of other courses in the modules "Amerikanische Literatur" and "Cultural Studies (USA)." Each part of the lecture series can be attended separately. It is highly recommended to attend the Übung accompanying this lecture, in which we revisit its content and discuss all the reading assignments.

Assessment/requirements: regular and prepared attendance, final exam.

Irish Questions, 3 CP

2 st. do 12-14

Berg

Why was Irish society more religious than most other societies in Western Europe until recently? Why have public perceptions of issues such as divorce, abortion, or the relationship of church and state changed dramatically over the last 30 years? Why did the Irish economy become one of the most 'globalised' ones in the 1990s? Why did Irish politics never produce a party system similar to those of other Western European polities? Why do Irish people still disagree whether they should call the island of Ireland minus its Northern part 'the Irish Republic' or the '26 counties'? Why is the far right less successful in Ireland than in most other areas of Western Europe? Discussing these and similar questions and employing approaches from history, political sociology, and cultural studies, this lecture course provides an overview on historical changes in Ireland in the 20th and 21st century.

Assessment/requirements: written test at the end of the lecture course.

North American Literature & Culture III: Cold War to Present – The Readings, 3 CP

2 st. mo 16-18

GB 6/137

Bieger

This Übung accompanies the lecture “North American Literature & Culture III: Cold War to Present,” which provides a historical and thematic overview of North American literature and culture from the Cold War to the present. Week by week it revisits the content of the lecture and discusses all its reading assignments. In other words, it does not make sense to take this course without attending the lecture. On the other hand, it is highly recommendable taking this course in combination with the lecture.

In addition to deepening the foundations laid by the lecture for the study of North American literature and culture, the course teaches students to how ‘close read’ different types of cultural artifacts in their specific (media) historical context.

Assessment/requirements: regular and prepared attendance, several short written assignments with a focus on close-reading cultural artifacts.

Word Formation around the World, 3 CP

2 st. mi 10-12

GB 6/131

Meierkord

New words enter the English language every day. Typically, these are the results of what is called word-formation, such as compounding, affixation, conversion and shortening processes (e.g. clipping and abbreviation). In this seminar, we will investigate how the strategies that speakers of English around the world choose to create new words have changed throughout time, in the various places where English is used (e.g. Britain in comparison to Kenya and Singapore), in new genres (e.g. in chats or short messaging), and by learners of English and users of English as a lingua franca. Using various forms of data, we will also discuss how the impact of a word formation strategy can be measured in terms of its frequency and productivity and in which text types or styles individual strategies are chosen more often.

Assessment/requirements:

Übung: regular active participation (at least 67%) and reading, contributions to Moodle forums and online activities, in-session contribution in a format of your choice.

Seminar: the above, plus either an empirical term paper (ideally based on your presentation) or a report (7-8 pages) on empirical analyses related to one of the other thematic sessions.

Examensmodul: active regular participation (min. 67%) and reading, contributions to Moodle forums and online activities, annotated bibliography of 10 titles related to the course topic(s) or a 30-minute oral in-class exam on such 10 titles.

Indian English, 3 CP

Blockseminar

GB 6/131

Meierkord

Vorbesprechung: 08.04.2025, 14-16

Termine: 25.04.25, 23.05.25, 27.06.25, 11.07.25, je 14-18

English was transported to India when the British East India Company established a trading post in 1600. Subsequently, the British reign in India led to an increasing use of English on the subcontinent, and after India gained independence in 1947, English has continued to be used as an official language until today. As a result of this history, a number of different forms of English are in daily use in India today. Usually, Indian English refers to a second language variety, spoken by mother tongue speakers of Hindi, Tamil, Gujarati etc.. But there are also a number of pidginised varieties of English which are or have been spoken in India. In this seminar, we will analyse the particular characteristics of Indian English (phonology, morphology, syntax, and the lexicon) and the sociolinguistic status of English in India today.

We will also discuss various methodological approaches to the description and analysis of Indian English, and we will compare Indian English with Black South African English in order to identify features that seem to characterize all second language varieties of English. The course will conclude with a look at diasporic varieties of Indian English, i.e. English as spoken by Indian immigrants in Britain or South Africa.

Assessment/requirements:

Übung: regular active participation (at least 67%) and reading, contributions to Moodle forums and online activities, in-session contribution in a format of your choice.

Seminar: the above, plus either an empirical term paper (ideally based on your presentation) or a report (7-8 pages) on empirical analyses related to one of the other thematic sessions.

Examensmodul: active regular participation (min. 67%) and reading, contributions to Moodle forums and online activities, annotated bibliography of 10 titles related to the course topic(s) or a 30-minute oral in-class exam on such 10 titles.

050 705Scottish English and Scots, 3 CP

2 st. mi 14-16

GB 6/137

Müller, T.

Scots and Scottish English are often treated as being at opposite ends on a dialect continuum of Scottish varieties of English. Yet, Scots has a very valid claim to being a separate language altogether, and its history is quite distinct, going back to a northern variety of Old English which is today known as Old Northumbrian. Scottish English, on the other hand, is usually defined as standard English with a distinctly Scottish pronunciation and, accordingly, is much younger than Scots.

This class will investigate how Scots and Scottish English differ, where they both come from and what their relevance is today. We will learn about different Scottish English accents and varieties, where Scots is still spoken, and we will have a brief glance at older Scots texts, in particular Barbour's Bruce (the first known text in Scots) and Robert Burns' "Auld Lang Syne".

Assessment/requirements: two written assignments, homework, reading assignments, active participation.

050 707Showing Tales: Shakespeare and Gower, 3 CP

2 st. mo 10-12

GB 6/131

Weidle

This is a companion course to Prof. Majewski's Telling Tales: Gower (Tue 12-14). Although these courses can be taken independently, we recommend that students, if possible, enrol in both. The idea of these twin seminars is to look at the ways stories are told in different media from different perspectives. In our courses we will address how stories travel through time and genres, how the medial features of narrative texts and drama affect the way a story is told, and which authorial and ideological agendas are involved. The central primary text that constitutes the basis of both courses is Gower's collection of tales Confessio Amantis.

In my course, a focus will be placed on William Shakespeare and George Wilkins' Romance play Pericles for which the playwrights relied largely (but not exclusively) on the Confessio Amantis. We will look at the relationships between the source texts and the play, discuss the changes made by Shakespeare and Wilkins, and attempt to relate these to contexts of the early modern theatre scene. We will also address the semiotics of theatre, i.e. how the play 'narrates' the story and which channels and semiotic codes are involved in theatrical representation. Because of the fundamental medial differences between a printed text and a performed play, writer and playwright tell stories differently. For example, while the stories in Gower's Confessio Amantis are told by a homodiegetic (i.e. first-person) narrator, Shakespeare and Wilkins' play presents the story in what seems to be an unmediated manner. But as we shall see, even in Pericles we can identify narrative agents and structures that mediate, arrange, select and 'narrate' the story to the audience.

The secondary material and a modern English translation of Gower's Confessio Amantis will be made available on Moodle, copies of Shakespeare/Wilkins' Pericles, however, need to be obtained by each student. I recommend the Third Arden Series edition by Suzanne Gosset (first publ. 2009).

Please make sure to have read the "Tale of Apollonius of Tyre" from the Confessio Amantis (in the modern English translation made available on Moodle and to be found here: https://scholarworks.wmich.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1008&context=mip_teamsvaria) and the play Pericles by the first session!

Ideally, Prof. Majewski's and my class meet about 3 times (ideally at the beginning, in the middle, and at the end of term) to compare our findings and to enable discussions between courses. When and where these meetings will take place, will be decided at the latest by the second session (depending on students' times of availability).

Assessment/requirements: Übung: regular and active attendance, undivided attention in class, participation in the collaborative sessions with Prof. Majewski's seminar, oral or written contribution to be specified at a later stage; Seminar: regular and active attendance, undivided attention in class, participation in the collaborative sessions with Prof. Majewski's seminar, term paper (15 pages) to be handed in by 30 September 2025.

Shakespeare's Sonnets – A Comprehensive Approach, 3 CP

2 st. di 10-12

GABF 04/252

Weidle

In this course we will engage more thoroughly with some of the themes, contexts, sonnets, and approaches that I discuss in the lecture on the Sonnets (Tue 8:30-10:00). Although the lecture and the seminar can be taken independently from each other, I recommend – if possible – to attend both courses.

In the course, we will address, among other, the following questions: How do the sonnets engage with their own tradition? What is the authorial status of the early editions? How are the sonnets organized in the sequence? What story (or stories) do they tell? Who are the main characters and what are their relationships? How do the theme clusters of preservation, writing, desire, deception, and imagination organize the poems in the collection? How do they address notions and concepts of gender, sexuality, 'race' and Blackness? What can the sonnets tell us about the early modern literary marketplace and the patronage system? How does the collection address poetological concerns? And how do the sonnets thematize the role and function of imagination and memory in sonneteering and the experiencing of desire?

In addressing these concerns, we will pursue a two-pronged approach: while discussing critical approaches, discourses, and concepts, we will at the same apply them to selected sonnets and approach the poems in a close-reading manner.

The course is based on my Comprehensive Guide to Shakespeare's Sonnets (Bloomsbury, The Arden Shakespeare, 2024). Students interested in purchasing a copy at a reduced price should contact me via email (staff-anglistik1@rub.de). Secondary material will be made available on Moodle. Students should obtain either the Arden edition of the Sonnets (edited by Katherine Duncan-Jones) or the Oxford edition by Colin Burrow.

Assessment/requirements: Übung: regular and active attendance, undivided attention in class, oral or written contribution to be specified at a later stage; Seminar: regular and active attendance, undivided attention in class, term paper (15 pages) to be handed in by 30 September 2025.

Telling Tales: John Gower, 3 CP

2 st. di 12-14

GB 6/131

Majewski

John Gower's Confessio Amantis was a bestseller in the later Middle Ages, having come down to us in almost 50 medieval manuscripts. In this seminar, we will uncover how Gower opens up a multiplicity of voices within and beyond his Confessio, and also in which ways his fascinating compilation of tales influenced contemporary authors like Geoffrey Chaucer and later ones like William Shakespeare alike.

Gower lived in a period of English history that was in many ways similar to our own: the country was struck by pandemics, social upheaval, and political unrest. But Gower believed that the world can be a better place: his Confessio offers examples of how such a better world could be imagined. The tales – “Somewhat of lust [pleasure], somewhat of lore [learning, wisdom]” (CA, Prologue, l. 19) – cover a wide range of topics and genres, and are particularly interesting from a narratological point of view. They are embedded in a frame narrative, in which Venus sends the priest Genius to the love-sick Amans for help and guidance. Genius interrogates Amans, hearing his confession. To illustrate the Seven Deadly Sins, Genius tells more than 100 stories – re-tellings of classical mythology (especially Ovid's Metamorphoses), biblical matter, historical accounts, and literary works – that serve as examples of good and bad Love – and, between the lines, also as examples of a good and bad England. We will discover how these 'tales within the tale' stand in relation to each other, to the frame narrative, and to the larger socio-political and cultural contexts of late-14th-century England.

This is a companion course to Prof. Weidle's "Showing Tales: Shakespeare and Gower". Although the courses can be taken independently, we recommend that students, if possible, enrol in both of them. The idea of this twin seminar is to look at the ways stories are told in different media from different perspectives. In both courses we will address how stories travel through time and genres, how the medial features of narrative texts (and drama) affect the way a story is told and with which authorial and ideological agendas. Prof. Weidle and I would like to make it possible that our courses meet about three times (ideally at the beginning, in the middle, and at the end of term) to compare our findings and to enable discussions across courses. When and where these meetings will take place, will be discussed and decided in the second session at the latest.

Assessment/requirements: No previous knowledge of Middle English is required. However, students should be prepared and willing to engage with the Middle English text. Confessio Amantis (in Middle English and in a brand new translation) is available in electronic form. Primary and secondary texts will be uploaded to Moodle.

Übung: thorough reading and preparation of selected text passages on a weekly basis; active participation in class; participation in the collaborative sessions with Prof. Weidle's seminar; short presentation; Seminar: thorough reading and preparation of selected text passages on a weekly basis; active participation in class; participation in the collaborative sessions with Prof. Weidle's seminar; term paper (ca. 15 pages; deadline will be announced in the seminar).

Tobias Smollett: The Expedition of Humphry Clinker, 3 CP

2 st. mo 12-14

GB 6/131

Klawitter

Tobias Smollett's epistolary novel The Expedition of Humphry Clinker (1771) relates the exciting journey of a Welsh gentry family through England and Scotland. The events are reported from various perspectives, since each member of the family writes to friends in their own, idiosyncratic way. Visits to such centres of eighteenth-century life as the spa towns Bath and Scarborough or the pleasure garden Ranelagh in London give rise to extensive comments about contemporary manners and social conditions. In our discussions we will explore the narrative techniques in Smollett's comic masterpiece and prominent aspects of eighteenth-century culture which are thematized in the novel.

Participants should acquire the following edition:

Tobias Smollett. The Expedition of Humphry Clinker (Oxford World's Classics), edited by Lewis M. Knapp and Paul-Gabriel Boucé. Oxford UP, 2009, ISBN-13: 978-0199538980.

Poets on Poetry: Self-reflexivity in Contemporary British Poetry, 3 CP

2 st. do 12-14

GB 6/137

Klawitter

Contemporary poets are often willing to talk about their motives for writing poetry, to discuss aspects of the creative process, to reflect on their understanding of language, to express thematic concerns and poetic principles, to explain their relation to certain traditions and their indebtedness to certain poets. An intriguing form of such self-definition and reflection are the so-called 'metapoems', poems about the writing of poetry (also sometimes the dissemination and reception of poetry).

In this seminar we will read metapoems by Ted Hughes, Seamus Heaney, Charles Tomlinson, Edwin Morgan, Anne Stevenson, Vernon Scannell, Michael Hamburger, Roy Fisher, Wendy Cope, Linton Kwesi Johnson, Carol Ann Duffy and more recently successful poets. The focus will be on how poetic techniques are employed to engage readers in reflections on the art of poetry and its socio-cultural significance.

All the texts used in class will be made available through Moodle.

Assessment/requirements: Übung: test at the end of term; Seminar: 12-page research paper.

British and American Nature Poetry – A Comparative Approach, 3 CP

2 st. di 8.30-10

GB 6/131

Ottlinger

Beginning with the period of English Romanticism, this seminar will focus on the historical development of nature poetry from the 18th up to the 20th centuries, both in Great Britain and the United States. Based on in-depth analyses of selected poems representative of the various literary periods and authors, we will discuss the different nature concepts against the background of Romantic traditions and will thus oscillate between continuity and change. Another overriding aim of this class is to improve students' skills in poetry analysis.

All primary texts to be discussed in class will be provided on Moodle.

Assessment/requirements: regular attendance, active class participation, thorough preparation of the texts, short end-of-term test (one hour).

Racial Passing in U.S. Literature and Film, 3 CP

2 st. di 10-12

GB 6/137

Bieger

U.S. race relations are ruled by the “colorline,” the symbolic boundary that separates Black and white America. The course focuses on the practice of passing, usually understood as the “passing for white” by means of which light-skinned African Americans have been crossing this line—at immense personal risk, and at the expense of giving up their Black identity and community. To grasp the significance of this practice, it is important to know that the idea of the colorline is based on a biological fiction: For a long time, who counted as Black in the U.S. was defined by the “one drop rule,” according to which a single drop of “Black blood” determined the racialization of human life. After the end of the transatlantic slave trade in 1808, it was an effective tool for declaring the children of enslaved women and their owners (mostly conceived through sexual abuse) as “human property.” Ironically, this biopolitical form of extraction inherent in U.S. colonialism was instrumental in the emergence of a group of people who were able to pass. This group not only inherited the controversial history of “miscegenation” (or “racial mixing”); it marked the transgression of a founding paradox: that of unequal rights in the land of equality.

So yes, racial passing is a quintessentially American phenomenon. But because of the dangers involved in it, there are virtually no records. In this situation, the “novel of passing” is an indispensable archive. Originating in the late 19th century, the genre attests to the failure of U.S. society to integrate almost four million former slaves, which manifested itself in racial segregation, mass lynchings, and the “great migration” of African Americans to the North. And if the “colorline” divided and held this society together in equal measure, the “novel of passing” must be seen as a battleground in the struggle for social cohesion, for it lays bare its systemic inconsistencies. When film emerged as a new medium of storytelling in the early 20th century, it was soon taken up by those seeking to contest the “colorline” through narrative art with film adaptions of novels of passing.

In comparing literary and filmic explorations of passing, the course seeks to make tangible and critically interrogate the different media affordances of these two powerful forms of narrative art. Concretely, we will study four novels of passing and their film adaptations. Starting with Charles Chesnutt's The House Behind the Cedars (1900), the first novel by an African American author who was himself white enough to pass, and its 1927 film adaptation by Oscar Micheau, we turn to Nella Larsen's Passing (1929) and its 2021 film adaptation by Rebecca Hall, Fannie Hurst's Imitation of Life (1933) and its 1959 film adaptation by Douglas Sirk, and Philip Roth's The Human Stain (2000) and its 2003 film adaptation by Robert Benton. We will end the course with a fifth novel, Brit Bennett's The Vanishing Half (2020), which is currently being adapted as a tv-series, to ask ourselves what a successful adaptation of the novel might look like.

In tracking coercive power of the “colorline” through these cultural artifacts, a main objective will be to assess the intersection of race and gender. How is passing gendered in our primary sources, and what impact does this have on the individuals and communities depicted in them? Do the novels and films imagine ways to expose, resist, or remodel the normalizing forces of race and gender that they interrogate through the practice of passing? Do the acts of passing depicted in them inform and/or contradict one another?

N.B. Even though some of our novels are fairly short, the course is reading intense! I recommend that you purchase all five novels ahead of time and start reading them right away. You will have extra reading time because there will be no class on June 3 due to my attendance of an international conference. As of the viewing assignments: unless noted otherwise in the course syllabus, it is your responsibility to gain access to them.

Assessment/requirements: Übung: regular and prepared attendance, participation in an expert group, submission of expert notes; Seminar: regular and prepared attendance, participation in an expert group, term paper (15 pages) or oral exam.

In preparation for the course, please read Patti Smith's National Book Award-winning memoir Just Kids and Esi Edugyan's Half Blood Blues or Jennifer Egan's A Visit from the Goon Squad. Please note: While the theoretical framework for the course will be set by secondary texts provided on Moodle, course participants will get to choose the performers/bands who are studied in the course of the semester.

Re-Writing the Classic:

Percival Everett's James and Barbara Kingsolver's Demon Copperhead, 3 CP

GABF 04/252

Bieger

Introductory Sessions: Tuesday, April 15, 14-16h; Tuesday, April 22, 14-16h

Block 1: May 23 (Friday) & 24 (Saturday), 10:00-16:00

Block 2: July 4 (Friday) & 5 (Saturday), 10:00-16:00

In recent years, re-writes of classical texts have been among the most popular, critically acclaimed and political ambitious works of U.S. literature. This course examines this phenomenon based on two of its most prominent examples: Percival Everett's James (2024), an international bestseller and winner of the National Book Award and Kikus Price, which reimagines Mark Twain's The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn (1884) from the perspective of Huck's travel companion Jim, who seeks to escape his enslavement; and Barbara Kingsolver's Demon Copperhead (2022), also an international bestseller and winner of the Pulitzer Prize and Women's Prize for Fiction, which transports the story of orphanage, deprivation and poverty told by Charles Dickens in David Copperfield (1848) from mid-19th century London to a present day Appalachia rampaged by the opioid crisis.

The course seeks to understand the striking success of these two recent novels by relating them to the stories which they retell. How do they build on those stories and why are they still relevant more than a century later? What has been changed in re-writing them and why are these changes interesting from a formal or artistic point of view? What makes the re-writes entertaining or even provocative and engaging for today's readers? How much knowledge of the original text is expected from their readers? Who are they written for? What are the re-writes trying to accomplish, both artistically and politically?

In addressing these questions, we not only want to gain a firmer grasp on the success of Everett's and Kingsolver's novels but also develop a critical tool kit for the transhistorical and transcultural analysis of literary texts. An important part of this endeavor is to establish conjointly how we shall proceed: Given our goal to explain the success of the re-writes, does it make more sense to start with the original or the new version of the text? Or have half of the group do one thing and the other half to the other? On what criteria shall our assessment be based? To grant us a maximum of flexibility in our discussion of the material, we will use the first two weeks of class to make a plan and then spend a block of two days with each couple. This structure also has the advantage of granting two extensive reading periods. If you plan accordingly, this shall make it easier to keep up with the reading.

NB: This course is reading intense! I recommend that you purchase all four novels ahead of time and start reading them right away.

Assessment/requirements: Übung: regular and prepared attendance, participation in an expert group, submission of expert notes; Seminar: regular and prepared attendance, participation in an expert group, term paper (15 pages) or oral exam.

Friday, 11. April, 9:00-17:00 Uhr, RUB (GB 02/160)

Friday, 25. April, 9:00-17:00 Uhr, RUB (GB 02/160 & excursion to the RUB Botanical Garden)

Friday, 9. Mai, 9:00-17:00, TU DO (Student Conference)

The garden, as a place and as a metaphor, has been central to British, postcolonial, and American cultures, from the Eden-like innocence of Columbus's "new world," to the Biblical land of "milk and honey," landscape paintings, ecocritical literature, indigenous and postcolonial garden poetry, down to the "paradieses lost", gardening as lifestyle practice to contemporary overtourism. Gardens also happen to be at the center of decolonial and ecocritical discourses that circulate in today's public sphere, which narrate the earth as a fragile garden to be preserved and protected, but also capable of unimaginable destruction. This block seminar, in collaboration with the British Cultural Studies department of the TU Dortmund, will take you on a literary tour through gardens in Anglophone literature and cultures, and on a literal tour of the botanical garden in Bochum. This interdisciplinary class also includes guest lectures and collaborations with Dr. Sibylle Klemm (TU Dortmund American Studies) and her own seminar on American gardens. Students who sign up for this class should be interested in doing their own research on gardens in British, postcolonial, and American media and present their results in form of a small student conference.

Assessment/requirements: Übung: active participation, short written assignment, group presentation (15 min.); Seminar: the above, plus two short analytical essays.

Britain and its Muslims, 3 CP

2 st. fr 12-14

GABF 04/413

Berg

Many in the British media and public were obsessed with Muslims at different times. Recent Palestine solidarity, several terrorist attacks over the last decades, the rise of Islamic State in the 2010s, the 'war on terrorism' in the 2000s, riots in the 1990s, the 'Rushdie Affair' in the 1980s have all become diffusely associated with British Islam and the 'Muslim community'. While the more circumspect commentators concede that there is no link between Islam and terrorism and that even Islamism is not identical with terrorism, Muslims in Britain are nevertheless frequently accused of their perceived unwillingness to integrate into British society. With 'self-segregation', as the argument sometimes goes, they contribute to a climate in which extremism and terrorism can grow. In this course, we look into the history, living conditions, and cultural practices of British Muslims. We analyse examples of conflicts that received wide publicity in the British media. We discuss some documentary and fictional representations of British Islam and British Muslims. Finally, we try to find an answer to the question why the presence of Islam is often depicted as a problem within contemporary British society – using tools developed in a variety of academic fields from international relations via research into racism to postcolonial studies.

Assessment/requirements: Übung: active participation, presentation of a collective research project; Seminar: active participation, (a) presentation of a collective research project and written summary, OR (b) research paper.

The Intercultural Encounter, 3 CP

2 st. di 10-12

GB 6/131

Viol

Are the English different? And if so, how exactly and why? What for many appears to be a natural observation of, and legitimate reflection on given differences, strikes others as so much stereotyping and problematic generalisation. Just how different does difference have to be to be worth noticing, and to how many people does such perceived difference apply? Are there exceptions, aren't there also a lot of similarities? In this course we shall be looking at how questions like the above seem to invariably inform our intercultural encounters, drawing on a number of theories that have been suggested to make sense of what goes on when people from different countries or cultures meet: from stereotype research and intercultural communication or competence models to conceptualisations of intercultural understanding. Students will engage critically with each of these approaches, reflecting on why and how they have been developed and assessing their potentials and limitations.

Relevant literature will be made available on Moodle.

Assessment/requirements: active participation, short oral presentation of a theoretical text and written report on an intercultural phenomenon (three pages).

Black Art History, 3 CP

2 st. di 16-18

GABF 04/614

Flamand

As a discipline dedicated to the identification, preservation, and appreciation of artistic masters and masterpieces, art history has often faced accusations of elitism and eurocentrism. Over the last several decades, critics and artists have also charged art history with neglecting the contributions of non-White artists and ignoring traces of Black subjects in historical artworks. The rise to prominence of several prominent Black artists, alongside an increasing commercial interest in "popular" forms such as street art, have unsettled many of the presumptions long embedded in the curatorial practices, modes of critique, and marketplaces which long defined the artworld. Black artists are not only finally receiving acknowledgement of their talents, but their work is becoming increasingly consolidated into an artistic establishment long defined by attitudes of exclusivity and practices of exclusion. That process of inclusion has not always been a comfortable one.

This course will survey several key moments and figures in the history of Black art. We will think about the relationship of art and art history to processes of racialization, exclusion, and marginalization, as well as consider the ways in which Black artists (and Black art critics) have leveraged creative practices in order to critique these processes and win recognition for their talents. We will consider approaches to art which draw from a variety of disciplinary fields, including the sociology of taste, the politics of culture, the history of media, and Black feminist theory. Rather than merely interpolating Black art into a mainstream history dominated by White Anglo-Americans and Europeans, we will struggle to chart a course which places Black art, Black artists, and Black artistic subjects at the thoroughly destabilized center of our shared cultural heritage.

This course will require substantial and sometimes difficult reading. Although students need not have a background in art history, an interest in art and a willingness to research and learn both in class and independently is expected. Students should arrive to each class session well-prepared and ready to discuss all assigned materials in great detail. Students may also be expected to curate and present a small exhibit on an artist or topic germane to the themes of the course.

Assessment/requirements: reading, listening, note-taking, active participation in small groups and larger discussions, completion of activities/homework, and a curatorial presentation.

- individually preparing a paper and presenting it to others and
- collectively planning and chairing a class discussion, or
- collectively planning and teaching a lesson.

The course offers the chance to experiment with strategies that make it easier for you to speak confidently and present a topic coherently and targeted at your audience.

Assessment/requirements: active participation, oral inputs (see above).

The main aim of this compulsory introductory course will be to give you a first good insight into some central theoretical and practical aspects of foreign language learning and teaching. We will be analysing your present beliefs about successful language teaching and learning, and possibly call some of them into question. To achieve these aims we will follow a reflective model of training which involves reading about and discussing some of the central developments in teaching English as a foreign language and considering new and alternative ways of organising and stimulating classroom interaction.

Assessment/requirements: active participation in the sessions is expected and you are required to complete assignments punctually and to the required standard. A final written test at the end of our class will also be part of the requirements.

Teaching Diversity via Young Adult Literature in the EFL Classroom, 5 CP

2 st. mo 16-18

GABF 04/613

Ellwart

In a time where right-wing politics flourishes and filter bubbles and echo chambers pull students as well as ourselves into an increasingly one-dimensional, mono-perspective view of the world, how can we make minority voices and diversity issues accessible for students? Is the English language classroom even the place for teaching social issues? Don't we have other subjects for that?

In this seminar, links between teaching literature in general as well as young adult literature in particular, teaching culture and teaching diversity are to be explored. We will discuss why and how literature is to be included in ELT, what literary competences are to be fostered and what place young adult literature outside the usual canon can take in all of this. Further, we will elaborate on why teaching foreign languages necessarily implies teaching culture and why diversity is part of it, what cultural learning means and how it can be approached, what form interdisciplinary global and social education takes in the ELT classroom and what competences are central to teaching culture and therefore diversity.

Together, let's work on designing educational settings that bring more diversity into ELT classrooms, that use literature's power to make readers broaden or even change their perspective on the world and that foster real meaningful interaction that has an effect on students' perception of the real world outside the classroom.

Assessment/requirements: active participation, developing teaching materials, in-class presentation/micro-teaching.

Ritter

01.09.-04.09.2025, je 10-16.30

Why might teaching songs and film in secondary schools be a good option for a modern language classroom? How does teaching songs and film differ from written texts? How do you prepare a session that is based on songs and film? This course will address these questions and will develop various approaches to teaching songs and films in secondary schools considering both intermediate and advanced language learners.

All the models of teaching that will be covered in this course are firmly tied to the current syllabus of NRW. Furthermore, AI tools for lesson planning and material creation will play a central role in this seminar.

Assessment/requirements: details about how to obtain credit points will be clarified in the first session.
